

ABSTRACT

The present invention concerns a plurality of variant nucleic acid and amino acid sequences obtained by alternative splicing of known genes which have been reported in the literature as being involved with tumors. The present invention further concerns a method for detecting said nucleic acid and amino acid
5 sequences, for example, for diagnostic purposes, especially for detection of cancer, predisposition to cancer or evaluation of cancer state.